

The Misses Rhodes gave a high five on Wednesday, the Misses Hanner on Thursday, and Mrs. S. J. Kenyon a high five for her eldest son on Friday. These, with the fun at the Fort on Friday evening and some smaller affairs, comprised the round of social gaieties for the week. Halloween night will be pretty generally celebrated in the city.

The Misses Hanner proved themselves to be among the most charming entertainers in the city when, on Wednesday last, they gave what may be appropriately styled a "chrysanthemum party." There were white and yellow chrysanthemums on the piano, on the mantels, on tables, in fact, in every available nook the eye was greeted by the feathery beauties.

High five was the chief diversion. Mrs. James Jennings won the first prize, a silver silk window; Mrs. Holden the consolation, a silver glove; and Mrs. Frank Jennings won the second prize, a silver umbrella.

The guests were Mrs. F. D. Hobbs, Mrs. Hoyt Sherman, Mrs. George Phelps-Holman, Mrs. Charles Field, Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Therman, Mrs. Whitely, Mrs. Egbert Roberts, Mrs. Owen, Mrs. T. B. Beatty, Mrs. Linn, Mrs. Donnell, Mrs. Kinkaid, Mrs. Niles, Mrs. Boxrud, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Elmer Jones, Mrs. Ingram, Miss Preston, Miss Laura Preston and Miss Royle.

On Thursday Mrs. M. J. Gray gave a high five which was charming in all its details. Mrs. Linn won the first prize, a copy of Whittier's poems bound with silk. Mrs. Boxrud won the second, a bonnet.

what great results are attained from the small, individual efforts of many in earnest co-operation. "In a spirit of wholesome discontent with present attainments, let the future copy fair our past, that the next report may show a ratio of increase equal to, if not surpassing, that of last year."

The work at the Ladies' Literary club last Friday was devoted to art, and the first topic treated of the "Artistic Achievement of the Egyptians," given by Miss Shearman. The following is a very brief outline. The oldest sculptures and paintings which have come down to us are the products of ancient Egypt. The earliest to which we can assign any date were those found in the tombs built during Cheop's reign. These depicted domestic life. There was no background, and the human anatomy assumed impossible physical positions. The Egyptians, however, did not commit the error of treating the "human form divine" than other early artists of early nations. Art assumed more perfection when the portraiture and shadow were introduced to some degree in these. Men were painted brown and women yellow. Even in such matters were the Egyptians hampered by conventionalism. The artist, perched by conventionalism, however, can only be regarded as an illuminator, rather than an artist in our acceptance of the word. Perhaps sculpture carried to a higher degree of perfection than any other art except architecture. When we approach this art, we must put the Egyptian on a lofty pedestal built by the admiration of 30 centuries. Regarding massiveness and grandeur, these structures demand the awe of even the satiated fan of steel representative of our age. The pyramids, the obelisks, the sphinxes, the colossal statues are unsurpassed evidences of what architecture was in Egypt, impressing the beholders with a deep sense of the constructive imagination of the architect who could design them, no less than with admiration of the ruler whose resources were sufficient to make them realities.

Mrs. Kimball followed this with the "History and Civilization of the Tigris-Euphrates Valley."

Of the five nations that flourished in the Tigris-Euphrates valley, the Chaldeans, the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Persians, and the Medes, the first to gain prominence, and is known as the "Mother of Civilization." The inhabitants were learned, excelling in philosophy, magic and astronomy, especially the latter. There was little of interest in the history of Chaldea, as very early she became subjugated by and identified with its northern rival, Assyria, with Nineveh her capital. The Assyrians, however, flourished for six centuries, adding conquests to its vast domains, and borrowing from the civilization of the conquered tribes. Their last, and most glorious, however, was the empire of the Medes, which was the last of the great empires of the world. not eat anything that has been already killed for it, preferring to kill its food itself. The goats are thrust through a small door at the end of the cage alive, when, fixing its great eyes upon them, the snake suddenly lunges forward and crushes them in its powerful fold. After covering them with a thick slime about an inch deep, before swallowing, it flattens them out by squeezing them and then devours them almost at a gulp. After this the python goes to sleep and does not wake until it is time to feed again.

A gentleman in Maritzburg owns a python that has been confined in a cage for over thirteen months. During this period the snake has not eaten a mouthful of food of any kind, although every conceivable delicacy of likely snake food, such as frogs, birds, rats and meat, has been set to tempt its appetite. Its fast seems not to be broken, and the owner has at last abandoned the idea of coaxing the python to eat. It drinks a very small quantity of water. In a dormant state this fasting would be better understood, for in this state reptiles of this description have been known to exist for periods of eighteen months, or even three years.

RAPID GUN FIRE.
[From the Nineteenth Century.]
Modern guns on shipboard, with their great rapidity of fire and wonderful facilities for loading, bid fair to become almost as dangerous to their possessor and his friends as the traditional pistol in the hands of a small boy. The guns are too fatally easy to "loose off." In the old days, when it took a gun's crew a comparatively long time to load, a gunner thought twice ere he fired his first round; but now, with guns of moderate size, it takes no time at all to load, and the gunner need never be afraid that the act of firing will deprive him of the ability to utilize another occasion for an effective shot.

The result is that in action, real or make-believe, guns tend to be discharged more and more thoughtlessly, as it were, and "into the brown." If, with our improved guns, we can cure commensurately improved fire control all will be well; but I do not think that the present fashion of isolating the gun crew from the gun, and making the gun crew the eye of a commissioned officer conduces to this. To securing good fire control, therefore, more attention might be advantageously directed.
